CONTENTS

PEDIATRICIAN'S PERSPECTIVE

163 An Adolescent Fearful of AIDS: A ‘New’ Disease Presents Some Old Clinical Problems
Oscar Taube

ARTICLES

165 Acquired Immunodeficiency in Children
ArYe Rubinstein

171 Recent Advances in Injury Prevention
Joseph Greensher

179 Percutaneous Balloon Valvuloplasty for Congenital Pulmonary Stenosis
Jon B. Tingelstad

183 Rheumatic Diseases of Childhood
Robert M. Rennebohm

ABSTRACTS

164 Divorce and Teenagers

170 AIDS Embryopathy

177 Injuries in School

177 Prenatal and Perinatal Antecedents of Cerebral Palsy

182 Elevation of Serum Alkaline Phosphatase Concentration

191 Asthma—Participation in Exercise Programs

Cover: Boy With Baseball, by George Luks (American artist of the Ash Can school—1867-1933). Son of a physician from Williamsport, PA, he studied art in Philadelphia and Europe before settling in New York, where he worked as a newspaper illustrator and cartoonist. Then he pursued a career as a painter. His work, like the other Ash Can artists, depicted life in the raw. Boy With Baseball, done in the early 20th century, is illustrative of his work. This appealing portrait of a street urchin, done in broad brush strokes, with a baseball, symbolizes the all-American game. This is an appropriate motif for PREP 2-year 4, when sports medicine and physical fitness are special topics for review.

The printing and production of Pediatrics in Review is made possible, in part, by an educational grant from Ross Laboratories.
